Biographical Note: Bruce H. Smith was born February 16, 1919 in New York, New York. After graduating from Syracuse University College of Liberal Arts in 1940, he went on to Medical school at Syracuse, where he graduated in 1943 cum laude. Smith joined the U.S. Naval Medical Corps on April 15, 1943, and later that year married Elizabeth Jane Schrope of Palmerston, Pa, who became the mother of his four children.

After interning at a Naval hospital, Smith became a medical officer onboard the USS Vicksburg (CL 86) from April 1944 until November 1945, in the Pacific Theater of World War II. After returning to the US, Smith was awarded a senior residency in pathology at the New England Deaconess Hospital in Boston while also holding a teaching fellowship at Harvard University. Smith went on to become the Chief of Laboratory service at the US Naval Hospital in Mare Island CA, (Oct. 1950-Jan 1955) and the Director of Laboratories of the US Naval Hospital of Philadelphia, PA (Feb. 1955-June 1963) before being appointed Deputy Director of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology (June 1963-July 1967). During this time Smith was also a Visiting Professor of Pathology at Temple University (1963-1971).

In July, 1967, Bruce Smith was appointed Director of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology (AFIP) as well as a Clinical Professor of Pathology at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. (1967-1971). When he stepped down from his post as Director of the AFIP, Smith went on to become a Professor of Pathology at George Washington University, and the Director of Laboratories for the US Veterans Administration Hospital in Washington D.C. These two appointments lasted from August, 1971 to February, 1991.

Dr. Smith worked as a Professor of Pathology for George Washington College of Medicine. Throughout his career as a Navyman and a doctor Smith continued to publish articles in medical journals, and receive various decorations, such as two Battle Stars (Okinawa, Iwo Jima), and the Legion of Merit (1971). Numerous societies have granted Smith memberships and fellowships.
